In all there were 352 of these cases examined and in ninety-two of theu, or over one-fourth, the bovine bacteria were present and doubtless, came from drinking milk from tuberculosis animals. It is interesting to note too that tuberculosis of the lungs alone was never caused by the bovine tubercle bacillus. Out of eighty-eight cases of tuberculosis of the glands of the neck forty, or about one-half, were caused by bacteria of the bovine type, and of seventy-five cases in which the intestines and other digestive organs were involved fortythree or more than one-half were
